

The 15th International Ferroalloy Industry Conference 2025

Invitation

邀请函

November 20-22 , 2024 | Hangzhou, Zhejiang, China

Background

China, as the largest producer of ferroalloys in the world, holds a significant position in global markets for alloys such as manganese, vanadium, molybdenum, silicon, magnesium, and silicon metal. This status has attracted the attention of numerous domestic and international enterprises. In the face of challenges brought by industrial development, it is increasingly important to deeply analyze the changes across the entire steel and new energy industrial chain, comprehensively assess the development of the supply chain, and accurately identify opportunities within the chain to turn crises into opportunities.

Due to unexpected overseas factors, domestic alloy prices saw a significant rise in May, but the overheating trend has led to substantial adjustments for the second half of the year. Whether alloys can regain momentum in the fourth quarter, how to address high inventory levels, and whether overseas demand for alloys will improve remain key concerns for the market. At the same time, the Ministry of Industry and Information Technology has suspended the steel capacity replacement program. While this alleviates the surplus supply of steel, it poses significant challenges to alloy demand.

Looking ahead, the metal industry is expected to witness three major trends: firstly, resource companies are likely to continue expanding internationally; secondly, the overseas expansion of leading mining companies is expected to drive the entire industrial chain abroad; and thirdly, green products in the industrial chain will be particularly favored. Consequently, it is anticipated that the traditional alloy industry is about to undergo a period of rapid transformation and growth.

Mysteel cordially invites you to Mysteel The 15th International Ferroalloy Industry Conference 2024, which will be held in Zhejiang Hotel in Hangzhou, China on November 20-22, 2024. This conference will bring together 500+ decision makers covering the whole Ferroalloys industry chain including governmental organizations & associations, leading enterprises, service providers and many others.

We look forward to your participation in this remarkable event, where valuable insights and fruitful exchanges are guaranteed.
